In a miserable cottage at the bottom of a hill, two children were hovering over a smouldering fire. A tempest raged with- happy faculty of portraying them. out-a fearful tempest-against which man and beast were alike powerless.

A poor old miser, much poorer than these shivering children—though he had heaps of money at home -drew his ragged closk about him as he crouched down at the threshold of the miserable den. He dared not enter, for fear they would ask pay for shelter, and he could not move for the storm.

'I am hungry, Nettie.' 'So am I; I have hunted for a potato paring, and can't find any.'

'What an awful storm !" 'Yes; the old tree has blown down. I guess God took care that it did not fall on the house. See, it would certainly have killed us.' 'If He could do that, couldn't He send us bread ?"

'I guess so ; let's pray 'Our Father,' and when we come to that part, stop till we get some bread.'

So they began; and the miser, crouching and shivering, listened. When they paused, expecting in their childish faith to see some miraculous manifestation, a human feeling stole into the miser's heart -God had sent some angel to soften it. He had bought a loaf at the village, thinking it would last him many days; but the silence of the two little children spoke louder to him than the voice of many waters. He opened the door softly, threw in the loaf, and listened to the wild, eager cry of delight that came from the halffamished little ones.

'It dropped right from heaven, didn't it?' questioned the younger.

'Yes. I mean to love God forever for giving us bread because we asked Him.' 'We'll ask Him every day, won't we? Why, I never thought God was so good, did you ?'

'Yes, I always thought so, but I never knew it before.'

'Let's ask Him to give father work to do all the time, so we need never be hungry again. He'll do it, I'm sure.'

The storm passed; the miser went home. A little flower had sprung up in his heart; it was no longer barren. In a few weeks he died, but not before he had given the cottage, which was his, to the poor laboring man. And the little children felt a sweet and solemn emotion when in their mutual devotion they came to those trustful words-"Give us this day our daily bread."

A LAY OF REAL LIFE.

The following is a very fair exhibition of the viasitudes of human life, and of Thomas Hood's Some are born with a wooden spoon in their mouth, and some with a silver ladle."-Goldsmith. "Some are born with tin rings in their noses, and some with silver ones."-Silversmith.

Who rained me ere I was born, Sold every acre, grass or corn, And left the next beir all forlorn? My Grandfather.

Who said my mother was no nurse; Aud physicked me and made me worse, Till infancy became a curse? My Grandmother.

Who left me in my seventh year, A comfort to my mother dear, And Mr. Pope, the overseer?

Who let me starve to buy her gin, Till all my bones came through my skin, Then called me "ugly little sin!" My Mother.

Who said my mother was a Turk, And took me home and made me work, And managed half my meals to shirk? My Aunt. Who " of all earthly things," would boast,

He " hated other's brats the most," And therefore made me feel my post? My Uncle. Who got me in scrapes an endless score,

And always laid them at my door, Till many a bitter pang I bore? My Cousin.

Who took me home when mother died,

Again with father to reside, Black boots, clean knives, run far and wide? My Stepmother. Who marred my stealthy nrchin joys,

And when I played cried "What a noise!" Girls always hector over boys? My Sister. Who used to share in what was mine,

'Cause I was eight and he was nine?

Or took it all, did he incline,

My Brother. Who stroked my head and said, "Good lad," And gave me sixpence, "all he had," And at the stall the coin was bad?

My Godfather. Who, gratis, shared my social glass, And when misfertune came to pass, Referred me to the pump? Alas!

Through all this weary world, in brief Who ever sympathized with grief Or shared my joy-my sole relief?
